GLOBAL GREENSHIP

MARINELOG conference & expo
www.marinelog.com

Shipping needs to shrink its carbon footprint. The U.S. and Canada have jointly proposed creating what would be the world's largest Emissions Control Area. This has broad implications for the shipping industry, since more than 93,000 ships call at U.S. and Canadian ports annually.

What are the best solutions for compliance? Scrubbers? Ultra-low sulfur fuel? Are your ships being fitted with cold iron technology for when you are in port?

Beyond emissions, there are a whole host of environmental compliance and regulatory issues for ship operators, including waste stream management, ballast water management and ship recycling. What can ship operators do now to cut their fuel and energy consumption and reduce their greenhouse gas emissions?

These and other environmental topics will be discussed during a series of panels and presentations over two days at Marine Log's Global Greenship 2009 Conference & Expo. Well-known experts will discuss current policy, regulations and technologies during a lively agenda. There will be ample time built into the conference and expo for discussion, debate and the exchange of ideas. There will also be substantial time for networking during coffee and energy breaks, luncheons and the cocktail reception. See the accompanying program for more details on the speakers in attendance.

The conference

The registration fee is $825 per person. This includes all conference sessions, the expo, and all social functions, as well as online access to the conference proceedings.

The expo

A key component of the event is a tabletop expo, with green technologies and services on display from major suppliers.
